Solidarity with locked-out workers

Negotiations between Unifor Local 184 at Silicium Quebec in Becancour, and the employer resumed Sept. 26, though, as Local President Jean Simoneau pointed out, "from the beginning there has never really been any negotiations," during the nearly six months that the workers have been locked out.

"We have had several meetings, but the employer was only interested in demanding concessions," he said. These include a 20 per cent salary reduction, contracting out that would affect 30 positions, withdrawal of the defined benefit pension plan, and more.

In brief

Workers of colour conference

Aboriginal and workers of colour members of Unifor from across the country will gather in Port Elgin the weekend of Oct. 25-27 to discuss issues and strategize ways to overcome barriers of racism, discrimination, inequality and injustice in our workplaces and in society.

To register, contact your local union.

Book explains unions

An important new book, From Demonized to Organized: Building the New Union Movement, will be soon hitting the shelves.

Activist, writer and musician and Unifor member Nora Loreto explains unions to people of her generation who have little experience with organized labour.

She also challenges unions to examine their outreach to workers who have grown up under neoliberalism, and makes suggestions for how to grow and win improvements for all workers.

A book launch sponsored by Unifor is at the Ryerson Ram at 55 Gould Street in Toronto on Oct. 17 at 6:30pm

Taking aim at youth unemployment

More than 100 young workers, students and community organizers gathered in Toronto recently to find practical policy solutions for youth un- and underemployment.

"The employment crisis we face in this province runs deep, and it won't be solved by telling young workers and recent grads to simply pick up their boot-straps," said Ontario Federation of Labour Young Workers Vice President Matt Dumas.

The day-long Enough with Un(der)employment forum included presentations by young workers sharing their experiences; discussions on unpaid internships; the role of unions and the need for government job creation policies that go beyond wage subsidies and seed money for small business.

CJ Hanlon, a 27-year old shop steward for Unifor Local 1075 working at the Bombardier rail car facility in Thunder Bay, said the province's Buy-Canadian transit policy is one example of a practical solution.

"More than 500 young people are working today in highly skilled, good-paying jobs in Thunder Bay because there's a made-in-Canada criteria on cities who buy public transit vehicles," said Hanlon.

A new study by the Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives, The Young and the Jobless, found that the jobless rate for young workers in some communities tops 20 per cent.

"High tuition fees, unprecedented levels of student debt and a dismal job market are putting Ontario youth in crisis," said Alastair Woods, chairperson of the Canadian Federation of Students-Ontario.

The summit was co-hosted by Unifor, the OFL, Canadian Federation of Students-Ontario, Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives' Ontario Office, CLC, Workers United, and the United Food and Commercial Workers.

by Cadillac Fairview, threatens the jobs of nearly 150 unionized cleaners at Vancouver's Waterfront Centre and Pacific Centre.

The workers, represented by Unifor Local 3000, staged a rally near the Olympic torch on Oct. 2 and continued an information leaflet outside of the Waterfront Centre and other affected buildings afterward. The union is demanding fair treatment and a living wage for all cleaners in the city.

"Some of our members have been cleaning these buildings for decades and they earn wages that are already sub-standard in a city like Vancouver," Doherty said.

Unifor members were told that their employer,

Building cleaners in Vancouver face losing their jobs over savings of just pennies per square foot.

Servantage, would not have its contract renewed at the end of the month, said Unifor British Columbia Area Director Gavin McGarrigle.

"Cadillac Fairview is playing one contractor against another by demanding lower costs, without any consideration that their actions are driving workers deeper into poverty." Unifor is campaigning for living wages for cleaners across BC solution, to the only lock out of its kind in the 300,000-member union."

Meanwhile, members on education training at Port Elgin showed their solidarity by collecting $504 for the local. Unifor Local 2002 also recently made a donation to the locked out members, driving up a cheque for $1,000, along with the new Unifor flag.

The 145 members have been locked out since May 3, and the Commission des relations du travail (CRT) has issued two injunctions against the employer for using strike-breakers. The plant is Canada's only producer of silicon metal.

Community rallies for teen's family

Unifor Local 112 hosted a community barbeque and fundraiser recently to raise money to help end youth violence, in memory of slain teen Tahj Loor-Walters, the grandson of one of the local's members.

The Sept. 28 event was organized by the extended family of Loor-Walters, church officials, community organizations, teachers, municipal officials and the local.

The barbeque, held at the offices of Local 112, commemorated the life of Loor-Walters, the 15-year-old grandson of Unifor member Victor Loor, and raised money to support initiatives to end gun violence, improve education, services and support networks for teens and families in the area.

Loor-Walters' mother Symone Walters said that she will not stand for being pushed out of the neighbourhood by violence and fear.

"This is my home and I don't want to be made to leave," said Walters. "Why must we leave our neighbourhood where we grew up just so we can be safe and our children free from harm? We have to make changes here - so that families and children have access to opportunities and don't live in fear."

There were several speakers at the event, including family members, local politicians, youth workers and Unifor National President Jerry Dias.

Loor-Walters, a student at Father Henry Carr Catholic Secondary School, was shot on July 28 and died in hospital August 13. He was the second of four teens to be gunned down in the neighbourhood in less than six months.

on the World Day for Decent Work, Unifor National President Jerry Dias said the union will organize the summit so that "a conversation about creating and sustaining decent work can start in earnest."

"We need to start raising expectations that we can win jobs that pay fair wages, are safe and stable. And we want all workers in Canada to join in."

Dias said the union will actively seek out partners to co-host the summit, representing Canada's broader civil society, including labour, First Nations, non-governmental organizations, business and government.

Dias notes that part-time work makes up nearly 1 in 5 of all jobs and that temporary work is growing twice as fast as permanent work.

To build momentum before the jobs summit, Unifor is launching a national outreach strategy encouraging Canadians to reflect on their jobs and how to improve them. This includes a pan-Canadian billboard campaign, under the banner "Join the Good Jobs Revolution," as well as a social media campaign under the hashtag #GoodJobsRev.

Billboards are up in Halifax (6331 Lady Hammond Road), Montreal (De Bleury/Rene Levesque), Toronto (Gardiner Expressway, Kipling Avenue), Edmonton (103A Avenue/ 97 Street) and Vancouver (Hastings Street/Columbia Street).

Credit union workers back on the job

After more than two weeks on the picket line, 33 Unifor members at a British Columbia credit union are back on the job with more fairness in how training and educational opportunities are offered in their workplace.

The three-year deal at Khalsa Credit Union, ratified Oct 15, provides for raises of 3 per cent in each year.

As well, the Unifor bargaining team - Harjit

Nagra, Sarbjit Lidder and Kuljit Aujla - negotiated language requiring that training be offered based on seniority, rather than managers deciding.

Before staff can negotiate loans or offer financial advice, they must receive the proper education and training, Local 3000 President Jean Van Vliet said.

"The credit union needs to be fair about who it offers training to," Van Vliet said.

The tellers, loans officers and financial advisors at Khalsa, members of Unifor Local 3000, make less than those at similar sized banks and credit unions in BC. This contract will help close that gap, staff representative Stu Shields said.

The members had strong support on their first day of picketing, Sept. 28, being joined by British Columbia NDP MLA for Surrey Newton Harry Bains, along with Unifor

British Columbia Area Director Gavin McGarrigle and a number of Unifor local members and staff.

An earlier deal fell apart when the credit union threatened to lay off several workers, prompting the members to vote to stay on strike until the layoff threat was lifted.

Khalsa is the largest credit union serving the province's Sikh community, with $287 million in assets and 13,000 members.

Good Jobs Revolution

A decent living and hope for the future.

For most of us, that's all we want, all we need, to be happy and live fulfilling lives. And it's what Unifor wants, too.

The low-paying precarious jobs that define today's economy won't provide the security and stability workers need.

Instead, they promise a country in which young people can expect, for the first time in Canadian history, to be worse off than their parents.

That's why Unifor is moving forward with plans to host a National Good Jobs Summit, bringing together all stakeholders to start a conversation about creating jobs with fair wages - jobs that are safe and secure.

On the World Day for Decent Work on Oct. 7, Unifor National President Jerry Dias reaffirmed his promise for Unifor to hold a Good Jobs Summit in 2014.

Dias raises thousands for shelter

Unifor National President Jerry Dias raised more than $55,000 for the Halton Women's Place on Sept. 28 as he took part in the shelter's 'Hope in High Heels' walk in Burlington that morning.

It was the third straight year that Dias took part in the annual walk with his son Jordan. The pair signed up after seeing an ad in their local paper, and have now raised more than $125,000 for Halton Women's Place over the years.

A number of other Unifor members joined Dias in the walk.

"At any given time, the Halton Women's Place has 52 women and children living there," said Dias.

"This is a small fraction of the more than 3,000 women and 2,500 children living in emergency shelters across Canada on any day of the year - which amounts to a national catastrophe."

In a story written for the Huffington Post, Dias said the walk does more every year than simply raise much-needed money for the shelter. It also raises awareness about the issue of violence against women and gets people talking about what can be done.

The walk is an opportunity to have a massive conversation about why we have women's shelters and the enduring force of gendered violence and social, political and economic inequality.

Did you know?

It's no secret that anti-union attacks have reduced public support for unions. But the good news is Canadians share the values unions are advancing. And research shows we can win the public opinion war if we get out and talk-up unions.

That's why the Canadian Labour Congress has started a campaign to do just that. Using the theme Fairness Works, the campaign is driven by the idea that union members are the best ambassadors for a fair economy.

The CLC has already held hundreds of seminars across the country with local leaders to roll out the campaign and provide "conversation-starter" materials, including evidence to support facts, such as:

- Unions make workplaces safer and more democratic.
- The average unionized worker earns $4.97 an hour more than a non-union worker.
- 76% of union members have a pension.
- Women in unions earn $6.65 an hour more than those not in unions.

Vote of confidence for GM Oshawa

Unifor members at General Motors' Assembly Complex (Consolidated Line) in Oshawa have earned top marks for turning out some of the highest quality products in North America, according to leading auto marketing and research firm J.D. Power.

Unifor National President Jerry Dias said winning the J.D. Power Silver Plant Assembly Line Quality Award is not only a testament to the hard work of unionized auto workers, it's also a vote of confidence in an important facility that the company is slated to close next year.

"The future of this plant is still very much up in the air," Dias said at an internal award ceremony held in Oshawa on Oct. 2. "Every day the plant keeps working gives us more chance to save it in the long run."

Greg Moffatt, Unifor Chairperson of the Local 222 Assembly Complex, said the community of Oshawa cannot afford to lose this facility, which generates major economic spin-off benefits.

"Every job in this plant supports 10 jobs in total, up and down the value chain," Moffatt said. "The Consolidated Line is as much an economic driver for our community as it is a beacon of hope for the future of manufacturing."

Unifor Local 222 President Ron Svajlenko said the J.D. Power award highlights the advantage Canada has in vehicle assembly. "It's our skilled workforce that's driving that performance."

Vehicles manufactured by Unifor members at the Chrysler plant in Brampton and the GM-CAMI plant in Ingersoll were also recognized.

Unifor supports CPP reform

Unifor is commending Prince Edward Island Finance Minister Wes Sheridan for taking the lead among the Canadian provinces on reform of the Canada Pension Plan.

In a September 24 speech to the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council (APEC) AGM, Sheridan proposed increasing the CPP benefit maximum for Canadians in the $25,000 to $102,000 income range.

Unifor supports doubling the CPP and QPP. Unifor Atlantic Regional Director Lana Payne said that the union is pleased that Sheridan has identified the CPP as the vehicle for pension reform. "Minister Sheridan made an important point stating that PEI will only support Pooled Registered Pension Plans when the 'provinces and the federal government take concrete steps to strengthen the Canada Pension Plan."

Unifor National President Jerry Dias said the federal government has refused to acknowledge the financial problems facing Canadians today. "The problem is immediate for Canadians in the age 50 - 65 range, but there is also a need to put a plan in place for today's young workers."

Scholarships handed out

Thirty-seven young people from across Canada, all of them children of Unifor members, are pursuing post-secondary educations with the help of scholarships and bursaries from our union.

The $2,000 awards are a legacy of both unions – the Communications, Energy and Paperworkers union and the CAW – that came together Labour Day weekend to form Unifor.

Each of the winners got the scholarship or bursary for demonstrating a strong understanding of the labour movement in Canada and its importance.

The scholarships are just one of the ways Unifor helps young people, National President Jerry Dias said.

“Education today is very expensive, and this will help. But what young people really need are good jobs when they graduate,” Dias said.

All the awards went to students in their first year of college or university for the 2013-14 school year.

Ratifications

Raises at recycling firm

The members of Unifor Local 333 in Belleville, Ontario, have ratified a collective agreement boosting wages and making several other contract improvements.

The deal with recycling firm HGC Management Inc., ratified Sept. 6, gives the 14 members 2 per cent wage increases for each year of the three-year contract, plus a $150 signing bonus.

The contract also improves vacations (four weeks after 10 years, instead of 12), hours of work and increases the boot allowance. There were no concessions.

Jazz contract ratified

Crew scheduling employees at Jazz Aviation in Halifax have ratified a new four-year contract that provides for 2 per cent raises a year, as well as vacation and pension improvements.

The 40 members of Unifor Local 2002 voted 86 per cent in favour of the deal, which includes changes in sick leave and family care days, statutory holiday top-up and pay rates, and VSPs.

The new contract expires June 30, 2016.

“The membership at District 622 should be proud of the very first collective agreement ratified under our new Unifor 2002 banner,” said Jamie Ross, president of Local 2002.

Negotiations toward a new deal are expected to begin in the third quarter of 2015.

Get your signage and stationery!

The Unifor national signage and stationery program is currently underway. In an effort to make the transition to Unifor as smooth as possible for all local unions, the national office is undertaking a number of initiatives.

Local union logos: The Unifor Communications Department has worked to create local union logos for all Unifor locals. They are available for download on a password protected online portal.

Stationery program: Local unions will receive up to a year's supply of new Unifor stationery – including letterhead and #10 envelopes. In order to participate in the program, local unions must fax their request to 905-470-2205 or send an email to: stationery.papeterie@unifor.org, including a copy of their current stationery. Locals will be able to access digital stationery once the print version is finalized.

Signage program: The union will also finance the change of local union signage, to replace existing CAW and CEP signage with the equivalent Unifor signage. Locals who wish to have their signage changed through the national subsidy program should contact the national office by sending an email to: signage.panneau@unifor.org.

For the proper redirection of email, please put Unifor in the subject line.

For more information about these programs or on how to download the necessary local union logo files, please contact Unifor Communications Director Shannon Devine at Shannon.devine@unifor.org or 1-800-268-5763 ext. 6544.

Lumber mill reopens

A northwestern Ontario lumber mill shut down during the 2009 housing crisis in the United States is set to reopen with a new long-term contract with Unifor Local 324-308 that secures up to 300 jobs.

“This is good news for the workers and the community, and shows that we can work together to benefit all,” Unifor Local 324-308 president George Smith said.

EACOM said it would restart its Ear Falls sawmill in the spring of 2014. The mill, which makes softwood studs for the American housing market, shut in 2009 as housing prices plummeted south of the border in the wake of the economic slowdown.

The sawmill will produce more than 150 million board feet of stud lumber a year, with up to 125 Unifor members at the sawmill site and up to 175 more Unifor members in log harvesting and hauling operations.

The deal calls for wage increases of 20 per cent over eight years, immediate raises for some workers, a six per cent employer match defined contribution pension plan, improvements to benefits and the boot allowance, company funding for union training and improvements to seniority, layoffs, postings, bumping and contracting out language.

The contract also contained a commitment to encourage First Nations opportunities in sawmill and woodlands operations.

In addition, the Unifor flag will fly at the sawmill and the union's logo will appear on all finished lumber packaging.

Unifor approves last agreement with Kruger Inc.

Unifor Local 495 reached and ratified a new deal with Kruger Inc. in Deer Lake, Newfoundland on October 4, marking the seventh and last agreement with the company more than 18 months.

“By renewing these collective agreements in a proactive and collaborative manner, we're hoping it will enable the mill to reposition itself to take advantage of any opportunities in the future,” said Unifor National Representative Gary Healey.

The new agreement expires on June 30, 2015 and covers 22 members. Unifor Local 495 members at Deer Lake produce power for Corner Brook Pulp and Paper.

The facility has been in operation for more than 85 years.

“I'm pleased we were able to put in a place a new agreement that is suitable for both sides,” said Unifor Local 495 President Daryl Slade.

“I hope we'll be producing power well into the future.”

“While this was a difficult round of negotiations, we are proud of the fact that we were able to protect the defined benefit pension plan, while making wage gains after a period of nearly five years of frozen wages,” said Healey. “I'm happy that we were able to come to an agreement without any dispute as is the case in a large majority of our negotiations.”

Other Unifor local unions at Kruger include: 57N, 58, 60N, 64, 96 and 242, in addition to 495.
